Strengthening the Doctor-Patient Relationship: The Quality of “Attention” in Medical Practice

Molly Cooke, MD, MACP, is professor of medicine and the inaugural Director of Education for Global Health Sciences at the University of California, San Francisco. Dr. Cooke's academic focus is health professions education with a particular emphasis on educational initiatives addressing patient outcomes and cost of care in complex, chronically ill patients.

Dr. Cooke is a Senior Scholar of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching where she co-directed a national study of medical education. This work culminated in the text Educating Physicians: A Call for Reform of Medical School and Residency, which won the PROSE award for distinction in scholarly publication in 2011.

Dr. Cooke will discuss how to strengthen the doctor-patient relationship through the quality of attention in medical practice.
