The Present and Future of the Doctor-Patient Relationship

This academic year, the Bucksbaum Institute is very pleased to be co-sponsoring the 2019–20 lecture series “The Present and Future of the Doctor-Patient Relationship” with the MacLean Center for Clinical Medical Ethics. This important series of 26 lectures will examine whether the doctor-patient relationship will survive the challenges of the 21st century and whether in an era of rapidly advancing technology, physicians will be able to practice personal and caring medicine. The series will address these and related issues in the context of the current political and economic climate and in light of the uncertain future of the American health care system. The lecture series likely will be published either by Springer or by Oxford University Press.

Resilience Week Lecture Series

Physician burnout is a concern in the medical community and research shows that symptoms can surface as early as medical school and can increase with each decade of practice. The University of Chicago Medical Center, with the aim of bolstering more resilient physicians, seeks to develop innovative interventions to equip residents with the tools they need to successfully address key stressors identified as: Systems Issues, Team Dynamics, Difficult Encounters with Staff and Patients, and Work-Life Balance. This lecture series is co-sponsored with the Office of Graduate Medical Education.

International Conference: Delhi

Progressing with Partnerships: Shared Decision-Making Among Vulnerable Groups

Shared decision-making (SDM) between physicians and patients continues to be an area for growth and development. SDM is even more challenging between physicians and vulnerable populations, which including persons with disabilities, LGBTQIA+ populations, those with chronic pain and/or in palliative care, those at the end of life, and racial/ethnic minorities. This conference will seek to better understanding how gender identity, sexual orientation, disability, chronic pain, end of life care, and race can simultaneously influence shared decision-making and the importance of share decision-making in addressing health disparities among such vulnerable populations.
About us
The Bucksbaum Institute for Clinical Excellence at the University of Chicago was created in September 2011 with a $42 million gift from the Matthew and Carolyn Bucksbaum Family Foundation. To achieve its mission, the Institute has appointed 370 Master Clinicians, Senior Faculty, Junior Faculty, Associate Junior Faculty, Medical Student, and Undergraduate Student Scholars. In addition, the Institute offers a pilot grant program for Faculty Scholars; an annual lecture and seminar series; courses for Pritzker School of Medicine students; and an academic clinical excellence track in partnership with the University’s undergraduate college.
